

2016 Pacific Islands & Keith L. Camacho

2016

→ 2016

Keith L. Camacho

(Department of Asian American Studies, UCLA)
The State of “War Memory”: Reflecting on Conflicts and Coalitions in the Pacific Islands

9/25

13:30-14:00 17:40

1

The State of “War Memory”: Reflecting on Conflicts and Coalitions in the Pacific Islands

What is the state of “war memory” in the Pacific Islands? In this talk, I discuss the significance of World War II and its aftermath in the Mariana Islands and the wider Pacific region. My goal is to examine how conflicts and coalitions produce both the means and the methods by which scholars have come to analyze the war, its complex and varied histories, and its enduring and equally contentious political and social memories. Along these lines, I reflect upon my role as a native scholar-activist caught in-between colonial wars and

10/22

13:30-14:00 17:40

1

The State of “War Memory”: Reflecting on Conflicts and Coalitions in the Pacific Islands

What is the state of “war memory” in the Pacific Islands? In this talk, I discuss the significance of World War II and its aftermath in the Mariana Islands and the wider Pacific region. My goal is to examine how conflicts and coalitions produce both the means and the methods by which scholars have come to analyze the war, its complex and varied histories, and its enduring and equally contentious political and social memories. Along these lines, I reflect upon my role as a native scholar-activist caught in-between colonial wars and

3:05-3:20pm □□

□□□□□□□□□□

3:20-3:50pm □□□□□□

3:50-4:20pm □□□□□□

4:20-5:30pm □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□

5:30-5:40pm □□□□□□

6:30pm- □□□